

Dear Simsbury Staff and Families:

With the major winter storm headed toward Connecticut beginning this evening, I wanted to communicate prior to today's dismissal about our plans for tomorrow. Given the increasing severity of the forecast in terms of snowfall totals and the potential for high winds, we are concerned about the possibility of power/internet outages. Therefore, tomorrow is not the day to experiment with our plans to pivot to remote learning during snow events. Thursday, December 17 will be a traditional snow day for the Simsbury Public Schools, including the closure of all offices.

Assuming it is safe to do so, we will plan to be in session for this Friday, December 18. As previously communicated, next week will be planned remote learning days for all grade levels on December 21, 22, and 23.

Please stay safe and enjoy the day. We can certainly all use a traditional snow day!

Sincerely,

Matt Curtis
Superintendent
